Acoustics + Aesthetics:
a new dimension of design
We believe acoustics is not an invisible layer added at the end of a project, but an integral part of architecture. Acoustic comfort shapes how we work, learn, connect and live, influencing wellbeing and the experience of space. From the outset, we have combined acoustic performance with an aesthetic approach, designing wall, ceiling and furniture solutions that contribute to the identity of interiors. Through materials, shapes, finishes and colours, we aim to bring character and personalization to environments, from workplaces and hospitality to public buildings and, increasingly, our homes.

Ethics

Acoustic performance and aesthetics were soon joined by a third dimension: circularity. We sought to develop a more responsible design approach, exploring how materials partly derived from reuse and recycling can be transformed into acoustic solutions meeting the highest technical requirements of sound-absorbing surfaces. We design with their second and third life in mind, considering how they may be reused, recycled or transformed in the future. Creating spaces where sound, beauty and responsibility coexist in balance is the foundation of Acoustethics: acoustics + aesthetics + ethics.

Bridging manufacturing and architectural practice

Acoustics is our passion and a field of continuous research. We strive to make this discipline tangible and integral to interior spaces. Working alongside architects and designers from the earliest stages of each project, we provide guidance throughout the design process, from acoustic calculations to product selection and finishes. Combining the expertise of a manufacturer with the mindset of an architectural studio, Slalom acts as a design partner from concept to solution.

Materials in evolution

Expanding the creative possibilities of architecture is what drives us. Every acoustic solution begins with material research, from its core to its finish. Felt has always been at the heart of this journey, the result of a traditional process of pressing and needling. Whether made from recycled PET or natural wool, it combines sound absorption with versatility. Soft and lightweight, it can remain a flat surface or be transformed into sculptural three-dimensional forms, pressed into textured patterns or hand-crafted into bespoke elements. Its ductility allows us to reinterpret its aesthetic and functional potential.

Beyond felt

From high-performance finishing textiles such as Trevira, SEAQUAL® Bouclé and velvet to innovative bio-based materials, we are constantly exploring new possibilities that bring our vision of Acoustethics to life. FSC®-certified wood, flower petals and natural fibres sourced through carefully selected biological corridors are just some of the materials shaping the next generation of our collections. Each material becomes an active component of architecture, capable of defining atmospheres, expressing identity and transforming acoustic performance into an accessible design experience

Technologies

Three technologies shape our acoustic solutions, from flat to three-dimensional forms. Flat felt provides lightweight two-dimensional surfaces, while patented thermoforming transforms the sound-absorbing core with the acoustic textile into a single mono-material element, creating three-dimensional solutions such as ECOrange, available in a wide variety of shapes and volumes. Alongside industrial thermoforming, Slalom's Tailor-made Atelier is where bespoke products take shape through skilled craftsmanship. Creativity and manual expertise meet industrial precision to develop tailor-made acoustic solutions for individual projects worldwide.

Colour is part of our journey
From neutral to vibrant shades, colour enables us to offer architects and designers a wide palette across textiles and finishes. We approach colour as an ally of acoustics. Together with materials, it gives our solutions presence and adds an emotional dimension to the experience of a space, complementing indoor environmental quality. Our collaboration with a colour specialist combines research into historical interiors and colour forecasting to develop new palettes and curated combinations, inspiring designers to explore, personalise and create spaces that reflect their vision.
